Trail Ranger Program

- Started in 1970 the Trail Ranger Program works with our partner land managers to open the most miles of trail in a season while at the same time improving the trail system so all users can enjoy Idaho's trails.
- By making more miles of trail available to trail users, users are dispersed, environmental impacts are minimized and user conflict is reduced.

Trail Ranger Program

- Every spring other management agencies around the state participate in the program.
- Participating agencies provide temporary housing for trail rangers as close as possible to the trail system.
- Housing is usually rustic — such as a Forest Service guard station; but includes a sheltered sleeping area, cooking facilities, a clean drinkable source of water, showers, and refrigeration for food.

Collaboration

The Collaborative Coordinator will enhance IDPR's mission to meet the department's goal of: "No net loss of motorized access to recreational trails."

The Collaborative Coordinator will participate in collaborative meetings throughout the State.

This is made possible by reading and analyzing federal management actions that impact recreation opportunities and providing comment back to those agencies that suggest improvements or mitigation to protect those opportunities.

These actions may include travel management plans and watershed improvement projects among other things.
